

ALAN ROGER CURRIE

CHAPTER SIX

Casual Sex VS Relationships: “Wholesome Pretenders” and “Erotic Hypocrites”

“Most women love sex just as much as men, if not more. Many women are just as sexually uninhibited as a lot of the kinky men out there. The problem is, men are admired and patted on the back when they successfully seduce a lot of women; Women are usually ‘looked down on,’ criticized, and made to feel like whores if they reveal that they’ve enjoyed sexual pleasure with someone other than their boyfriend, fiancé, or husband. It’s unfair, but that’s life.”
A female friend of mine from college

Sex. If men and women were socialized in the exact same manner regarding their attitudes towards sexual relations, our dialogue with each other would probably be a lot more honest, and a lot less manipulative. Men would probably be a lot more honest and straightforward with women regarding their sexual desires and interests, particularly as it relates to their desire for casual sex. Then again, there have actually been studies conducted that revealed that men in serious relationships, or even married men, are many times close-mouthed when it comes to expressing their thoughts and desires related to sex. Why?

Nobody likes to be judged. What many men fail to consciously realize is that we indirectly cause women to behave in a manipulative manner